

Therapists say goodbye to repetitive strain injuries with Joya

Published on Tue, 10/01/2012, 09:47:30

While most massage and beauty therapists get affected by pain in their hands from repetitive movements and strain, many dismiss the initial warning signs until they develop into painful chronic conditions that generally affect the thumb, wrist, the whole arm and shoulder and will force them to stop doing the work they are passionate about.

Masseurs and beauticians form worldwide practices, spas and salons have been discovering a solution to this health challenge that also allows them to spoil their clients with a unique and precious treatment – Joya Crystal Massage.

The Joya concept of freely rotating crystal spheres in handy holders combines the healing effect of massage with crystal energies and acupressure in effective tools.

Ellen Bendin, manager of Joya-Australia says, “I am passionate about supporting therapists to create greater and deeper results with less effort and saving their hands when bringing well-being to others, while enhancing their treatment menu, maximising customer satisfaction and generating loyalty for sustained business success.”

One grateful Joya customer explained, "I have been a massage therapist in deep tissue for 20 years and my hands finally went! It was not until I discovered the Joya system that I have been able to return to massage."

After successful trainings in Sydney last November Joya is now announcing new training dates for Brisbane and Sydney.

Joya Crystal Massage - Relaxation in your Hands
